

New Program Offered at The Scranton School

The Scranton School for Deaf & Hard of Hearing Children is proud to announce the addition of an Elementary Applied Studies Program beginning in January 2014. Since the inception of the School in 2009, a Middle School and High School Applied Studies Program has been offered.

“We are pleased to offer this new program that allows us to diversify the services we can offer to families” stated Donald E. Rhoten, Chief Executive Officer, “This addition of this program is evidence of the continuing growth of The Scranton School and our commitment to meet the individual needs of deaf and hard of hearing students.”

Applied Studies programs at The Scranton School are designed to educate children with hearing loss and additional challenges such as but not limited to Autism, multiple physical handicaps, and cognitive delays. Teachers focus on instructing students in academics, communication, and life skills that promote independence. Adaptations are made based on each student's individual needs and personality to ensure each child reaches their maximum potential.
